

Synopsis

An innocent, sweet looking old lady is shown shopping at various stores, for items like shovels and tarps. While shopping, she is having a phone conversation with a unknown person, discussing how her job is wearing down on her and that she wished she could have a little peace and quiet and do her knitting. Her conversation continues to her car, where she is shown putting the items in her trunk. You then see that there is a dead body in the car.

The old lady is next shown in the woods, preparing to bury the body. She drags all her supplies with great effort, you can tell that she is very worn down by her job. When she arrives at the location, she begins to bury the body. However, she spots another dead body a few feet away, obviously the work of an amateur. She calls someone, presumably her boss, and asks what's going on. He tells her that since there is evidence everywhere, she could be caught if she doesn't change locations. She puts both bodies in her car and begins to drive to another location, very annoyed.

While driving to the next location, her car gets a flat tire. A good samaritan pulls over to help her, and insists on looking in her trunk for a spare tire. She tries to stop him, but he insists on looking for a spare. As he opens the trunk to reveal the dead bodies, she hits him on the head.

The old lady stuffs all the bodies in the trunk of the good samaritan's car, and drives off, more and more frustrated. She realizes that she doesn't have enough supplies to bury three bodies, and goes back to the store. The store clerk insists on helping her to her car, and she warns him that it's not a good idea. He still follows her, and she gets so fed up she kills him before he even finds the bodies.

She is finally driving to the burial site, with a now huge body count. She notices that she is getting pulled over, and thinks that the police have realized her crimes. When the officers come to her window, before he can say anything, she finally snaps. She confesses to her crimes and goes on a rant about how everything had gone wrong, how much she wanted to retire, etc. The police officer is shocked, because he was only pulling her over for a broken taillight.

The old lady is next shown in jail. However, instead of being upset, she is finally content. She is shown knitting with many other old ladies, in prison jumpsuits. She is smiling and happy.