

Log Line- a man robs a car only to realize that he's not the only person there

The story starts off with a man who planned to rob a car. He spots a car in the distance with the window slightly open and decides to steal it. After hustling the door to unlock, he realizes that the car was already unlocked and that the key was left in the ignition. To his surprise, as he was driving he spotted a hand on the rear view mirror and noticed a kid. He is baffled, and bewildered. There is a kid in the car. The man tries to get the kid to leave but the kid states that it is his car and that he has nowhere to go. The man decides it's best to give the car back to the kid once he reaches his destination, and they both agree to do so. Both the kid and the man are visually and emotionally separated as they go on for the rest of the drive. The man and kid decide to get food. Here they tell more about themselves to each other and list out the kid's backstory and why he's alone in the car. The man and the kid head out but the man feels bad for the kid due to his lack of clothes. They make a pit stop at a retail store. Both the man and the kid walk in and the man decides to get new clothes for the kid. They both don't have money so the man tries to have the kid steal the clothes while the man distracts the store clerk. The man has the store clerk walk around the other side of the store with him as the kid is taking as much clothes as possible. When the kid is done he decides to leave and gets close to the door but then trips and spills all the clothes. A loud thud can be heard, and both the man and store clerk turn around. The store clerk screams at the kid telling him to put back all the clothes and call 911. The man tries his best to stop the store clerk from dialing 911 but it's too late. The cops are on their way. The man decides it's best to tie up the store clerk and tape his mouth shut so he doesn't speak. The man doesn't want to but he left him no choice. When the cops come the man locks the front door. The cops can be heard outside asking for them to come out. The man refuses, saying he has a gun and a hostage hesitantly because in reality he doesn't actually have a gun. The cops say that it's best for them to come out or they will have to come in. The man decides it's best for the kid to grab the clothes and then the car and to make a run for it. The man doesn't want the kid to become a criminal like him. The story ends with the man on the ground, arrested, and the kid escaping the store without notifying the police.
